Dies Separate Several was a several was the center of a brilliant sense of entertainments in Boston and Just aftrward in Mellia. Later she was the organizer of the National Society of Battleship Sponsors which meets annually in Washington. Mr. Lyman Johnston, of Atlanta, and Mr. William B. Ricks were first to enter, approaching alone and down the aisles. They were followed by Miss Joy Tomilinson and Miss Edith Bowron, who, like the remainder of the couples, entered singly and in opposite a siles. Mr. Miles Watkins and Mr. Kenneth Underwood followed and Miss Glass, of Uniontown, and Mr. J. F. Chambers, of Atlanta, were the last groomsmen and Miss Ruth Lacey, of Cheyenne, Wyoming, with Miss Mary Kirkpatrick, the last bridesmaids to advance to the altar.

The bridesmaids made a charming nicture. Each was gowned in lingeric robes with shadow lace trimmings, cut low about the tareat and finished in soft laces. The gowns were just short enough to show the v...te slippers, and the final touch of picturesqueness was given by the flowers the girls carried—huge armfuls of Shasta datsics.

Miss Jean Campbell, the young sister of the bride, was her maid of honor. She wore a shadow lace frock made over yellow messaline; her arms filled with yellow reschuds of the pearl of the garden variety.

made over yellow messaline; her arms filled with yellow resebuds of the pearl of the garden variety.

The bride entered upon the arm of her father, E. K. Campbell, who gave her in marriage. Mr. Underwood, with his brother, Mr. Oscar W. Underwood, 2d, as best man, having entered from the vestry to jon them. The bride's gown was built of white crepe meteor, simple and graceful of design; the train of medium length, the laces filmy and artistically placed. A princess lace fichu adorned the waist and was caught at the hem of the train crossing the front of the skirt in quaint and lovely fashion. Her veil was in cap effect, finished about the face with a frill of point lace, which, with a wreath and cabochons of orange blossoms, made an exquisite frame for her charming face. The veil was beautifully draped, and paught an the shouldars and the train.

The most notably instance of this that I can remember concerned the slik hat. The popularity of this imposing form of masculine head gearhad fallen off, not only in England and the United States, but all over the world, and the manufacturers and artisans were in despair, nine-tenths of the demand for their wares having fallen off. King Edward, in response to appeals from the principal representatives of this industry in France and England sought to revive the vogue of the slik hat by wearing it in public on every possible occasion. For a time he made a practise of sending equeries to the principal smartclubs, the Marlborough, the Turf and others, on the mornings of race days, each of the men wearing a silk hat, as a hint that he himself would don one, and that it would please him to see the members all similarly "tiled." But his wishes were entirely ignored, and it was not until the King gave up his kindly exertions in despair and took to wearing a derby at a few race meets, that these clubmen, apparently by way of showing their independence in sumptuary questions, turned up in the newton the silk hat and the derby, but I never heard of anybody wearing one except the prince himself. I saw one exhibited in a shop window on Piccadilly as a curosity apparently, it did not seem to tempt any one to go in and buy. In short, I cannot recall having heard of any fashion in such a minor matter as masculine at itre that Edward VII, succeeded in in such a minor matter as masculine at itre that Edward VII, succeeded in in such a minor matter as masculine at itre that Edward VII, succeeded in in roducing in England 8t any rate. Under the circumstances it seems rather amusing that Parisians should look to his grandson for inspiration.

The appointment of Miss Clothilde Luisi as a full-fledged minister plent-potentiary to the court of Brussels to officially represent the republic of Uruguay has naturally caused a good deal of a sensation among the diplomats, who will feel disposed to treat this pretty young girl with a great deal more consideration than the representatives of some of the South American republics are in the habit of reciving, Miss Luisi is ontitled to the prefix of "Dr." to her name, as she has taken a degree at the University of Monteylden. It may turn out potentiary, for although she may

She should know how to win the love and sympathy of those around her for the government and for the people to which she belongs, and most important of all, she should possess in the most axquisite degree that not merely cardinal, but I might almost say pontifical virtue, namely, tact." No doubt time will show how near Miss Luisi approaches this high standard.
